Scent and Your Skin: Get the Chemistry Right

Did you know that the exact same fragrance can smell totally different depending on who you're wearing it? Parfums de France, St. Laurent, and the of course, the most famous of them all, Chanel No. 5, are all examples of fragrances that can smell different on different people. The reason for this is simple: our skin chemistry. Each person's skin has a unique set of oils and acids that can react with the molecules in a fragrance, creating a unique scent. So, if you're looking for a new fragrance, it's important to test it on your skin first. You'll know if it's the one for you.
